If the answer be in the negative, to what relief if any, are the aforementioned workmen entitled to?"

The first party filed its claim statement justifying the demand for the Charter. The second party filed its written statement presenting its side of the case in regard to the various demands. Thereafter the 1st party filed its reply reiterating its case.

When the case came up for hearing before this Tribunal, the representative of the 1st party stated that negotiations for arriving at a settlement were afoot. After taking a couple of dates, both the parties filed a joint memo with the settlement they had signed, requesting that an award be passed in terms of the settlement.

Under the settlement the Charter of Demands was withdrawn and wage scales under six categories for the employees was agreed on. The agreement also set out the Variable Dearness Allowance formula.

In view of the fact that even before the evidence stage i.e. the parties started negotiations and the same came to a satisfactory conclusion, this Tribunal has no hesitation in accepting the settlement to be fair and proper.

The following award is passed.

... Opp. Party

This is a complaint under section 33-A of the Industrial Disputes Act.

It is alleged that during the pendency of an application for Payment of dues in LCC/21/77, before this Court, the opposite party terminated the services of the complainants with effect from 7-2-78 for the sole reason that they had appealed to the Labour Court, and that no permission having been taken from this Court before the said termination, there has been a contravention of the provisions of section 33 of the Industrial Disputes Act.

The Opposite Party, inter alia, contended that there was no "industrial dispute" pending before this Court at the time of the alleged termination and hence the provisions of section 33 of the Industrial Disputes Act are not attracted and that an application under section 33-C(2) is not an "industrial dispute".

In reply the complainants stated that LC/SFA/2&3/78 were pending before this court and the termination was effected during the pendency of the said second appeals and hence an "industrial dispute" was pending. The reply also sought to set right the allegations as "to application for payment of dues pending", by stating that the two second appeals were pending. The preliminary point as to maintainability of the complaint was argued by both sides.

It should be stated that the second appeals are under the provisions of the Shops and Establishments Act. The implication will have to be that this Court in entertaining these appeals was exercising a special statutory jurisdiction vested in it by the particular enactment. It is not one of the ordinary or normal functions of the Labour Court or the Industrial Tribunal. The Labour Commissioner also discharged his functions as First Appellate Authority under the provisions of that enactment and not as a conciliation officer under the Industrial Disputes Act. For had it been otherwise, he could not purport to decide anything but only report failure of conciliation to the Government.

Now, section 33 of the Industrial Disputes Act can come into play only during the pendency of any conciliation proceeding before the Conciliation Officer or Board, (which necessarily has to mean under the Industrial Disputes Act as the Conciliation Officer or a Board can be appointed under that Act only) or of any proceeding before a Labour Court or Tribunal in respect of an industrial dispute. The scope of section 33-A is now fairly well settled. The following observation on page 888 of Malhotra's Industrial Disputes Act, Vol. I (Second Edition) is in point. "The first and foremost condition for the applicability of section 33-A, therefore, is that there should be pendency of an adjudicatory proceeding before a Labour Court or Tribunal ... In other words if there is no pendency of a proceeding before any such adjudicatory authority at the time of the alleged contravention of section 33, the provisions of section 33-A are not attracted."

An adjudicatory proceeding can be pending before the Labour Court or the Industrial Tribunal only when a reference is made under section 10 of the Industrial Dispute Act. As indicated already herein above, the second appeals are pending on account of a special statute and not on a reference under section 10 of the Industrial Disputes Act. A second appeal cannot be regarded as an adjudicatory proceeding.

Another observation of the learned author which is relevant runs thus "For instance, where a complaint was made under section 33-A of the Industrial Dispute Act, the Tribunal has to record a positive finding that there was a proceeding before it in respect of an industrial dispute; a decision on the question whether the dispute under the reference was an industrial dispute or not was essential" (see page 470).

The legal position being as above, the pendency of the two second appeals under Shops and Establishments Act cannot be regarded as attracting the application of section 33 of the Industrial Disputes Act. If those provisions are not applicable the bar created by them are also not in operation and hence there can be no breach thereof also. A complaint under section 33-A has to be for any breach of the provisions of section 33 before it can be considered to be competent. That is not so in the present instance. Hence the complaint is held to be incompetent and the following award is passed.

AWARD

The complaint is held to be incompetent and is dismissed.
